Graduate students serving as instructors for the department should anticipate teaching introductory undergraduate courses (1000 and 2000 level). With experience, graduate students may be considered as instructors for upper-division undergraduate courses (3000 level). Under most circumstances, graduate instructors will not be approved to teach 4000-5000 level courses.

In order to be considered for teaching, graduate students must meet the following criteria:

1. Applicants must have passed their comprehensive exams at least one semester prior to applying for any available teaching positions, or
2. Applicants must be within one (1) calendar year of having passed their comprehensive exams moving toward defending their dissertation proposal, or
3. Applicants must be within three (3) calendar years of having passed their comprehensive exams, dissertation proposal, and moving toward defending their dissertation.

If you believe you qualify for an exception to these criteria, please explain:
